

Instructor of Mathematics

Interlochen Center for the Arts seeks a creative, compassionate educator who can teach math and science in a boarding arts high school. The successful candidate will have the ability and willingness to teach mathematics at all levels from Algebra 1 to Calculus and Statistics, plus courses in one area of the physical sciences. Experience in computer science is a plus. The normal course load is five courses with 2-3 preps.

The Academy enrolls around 550 students, of which approximately 20% are international, and nearly 25% are ethnic minorities. Interlochen is committed to building a culturally diverse faculty and strongly encourages applications from women, racial/ethnic minorities, and other individuals from underrepresented groups.

Major Responsibilities

- Faculty are also called upon by graduating seniors to write letters of recommendation for college admissions.
- Familiarity with academic content management systems is helpful. Some teaching experience in a high school setting, preferably an independent school, is preferred but not required.
- A strong interest and willingness to collaborate with colleagues, both inside and outside the math/science department is important.
- The ability to work successfully with highly creative students with diverse learning styles is important as is experience and/or an appreciation for the arts.

Qualifications

- A bachelor's degree in mathematics or math education is required, and a master's degree is preferred.
- The successful candidate will have a background in teaching using a variety of modalities. All students have laptops, so familiarity with using educational technology is essential.
- Familiarity with academic content management systems (Canvas) is helpful. Some teaching experience in a high school setting, preferably an independent school, is preferred but not required.
- A strong interest and willingness to collaborate with colleagues, both inside and outside the math/science department is important. The ability to work successfully with highly creative students with diverse learning styles is important as is experience and/or an appreciation for the arts.

Work Environment

The instructor is provided with a computer and has access to a projector and printer, and other equipment as necessary. Salary is commensurate with experience.
